SOME THINGS TO CONSIDER

WEATHER

Borneo island benefits from year-round temperatures averaging between 27°C and 32°C, and humidity levels of around 80% for majority of the year. Blessed with much rainfall, most destinations in Borneo has average rainfalls of 220mm per month, but some pockets can exceed 4000mm per year.

While peak rainfall season occurs between November and March, it is still hard to pre-determine the weather on any set date as weather patterns are very irregular during this period – there are often cycles of wet weeks and dry weeks.

The beaches on the coast of Sarawak however, have more predictable weather pattern and have a distinctly drier season between April to September. However that being said, the months of December and January are almost guaranteed to experience heavy rainfall.

Because of our unique weather patterns, any guests with plans to book outdoor venues during our wet seasons will be required to have a compulsory back-up indoor venue in mind. The options available will depend on the size of your group.
